Exhibition overview

The idea for a large inter-disciplinary biennial neuroscience ‘festival’ in the UK was first spawned only six years ago. Since then the event has gained huge momentum, with the 2015 Festival in Edinburgh attracting 1600 delegates. Clearly it has caught the imagination of academics, corporations, SMEs and policy-makers alike, its unique feature being an extensive series of accompanying public engagement activities, from public lectures and debates to street art and hands-on interactive exhibits for families. The Festival of Neuroscience has now become by far the largest gathering of neuroscientists in the UK, attracting many delegates from overseas, and is expected to be the largest international neuroscience conference in Europe in 2017.
