Exhibition overview

Founded in 1947, the British Geriatrics Society (BGS) is a professional association of doctors practising geriatric medicine, old age psychiatrists, general practitioners, nurses, therapists, scientists and others with a particular interest in the medical care of older people and in promoting better health in old age. The society has over 2,500 members worldwide and is the only society in the UK offering specialist medical expertise in the wide range of health care needs of older people. It publishes a scientific journal "Age and Ageing", as well as statements of best practice, position papers, clinical guidelines on the management of specific conditions, audit results and the BGS newsletter

The BGS holds two scientific conferences each year, at which researchers present work into ageing and age-related conditions. The conferences include keynote speakers of international repute, platform and poster presentations and workshops. In 2014, the BGS Autumn Meeting will take place in Brighton, UK
