Exhibition overview

The British Association of Perinatal Medicine (BAPM) aims is to support newborn babies and their families by providing services that help all those involved in perinatal practice to improve the standards of perinatal care in the British Isles. Its objectives are to:

- Publish standards and provide guidance on good management and care
- Provide postgraduate education meetings throughout the year
- Facilitate clinical trials and other research
- Advise on training and education in perinatal practice
- Provide advice to Government and other professional bodies on developing and improving perinatal care
- Raise awareness of and proactively influencing the policy environment in which perinatal care is delivered
- Audit and monitor the outcome, structure and function of perinatal care for babies and their families
- Foster fellowship and collaboration among those involved in the care of the pregnant woman, mother and baby
